

The Appearance of Artes praedicandi in Medieval Manuscripts

Siegfried Wenzel

Artes praedicandi generically are (mostly medieval) treatises that deal with the art of preaching. They vary considerably in their scope. Some include longer discussions of the office of preaching itself, its institution, purposes, and demands, as well as the qualities and dispositions that a preacher of the word of God should have, above all holiness of life and pertinent knowledge. Others focus on how to build a good sermon and describe the structure of what is usually called the modern, or university, or thematic, or scholastic sermon form. This, in essence, is built upon a selected biblical text, called "thema," which is then divided into parts—usually three, although two or four or even more are considered as well. In making the division the preacher must obey precise logical and grammatical principles, and the parts that are derived from the division must be shown to have biblical support, in other words, they must be confirmed with biblical "authorities." These parts are then developed by means of a number of different processes which the preacher can select and use at his convenience, such as subdivisions, distinctions, biblical stories, secular exempla, name etymology, or authoritative quotations from Scripture, theologians, philosophers, and poets. Treatises that in this fashion deal with sermon technique and teach how to structure a sermon from its thema to the closing formula, I would call complete artes praedicandi, whereas those longer works that include discussions of the nature of preaching and the requirements of a preacher may be called comprehensive. In contrast to both, one also finds limited artes, that is, shorter works that deal only with a single aspect of sermon making, such as modes of amplification, and may list eight or ten or over forty ways in which a preacher can expand his subject matter, without discussing his choice of a thema or processes of making the division. The following remarks will deal with the complete artes praedicandi. As their title indicates, building a good sermon was considered an art, a technique that demands knowledge and skills comparable to those of a painter or sculptor or poet or even a mason. And this technique such works set out to teach.

Although only a small percentage of surviving artes praedicandi have been edited and studied (less than two dozen out of the approximately 240 titles listed in the standard handlist of artes praedicandi),¹ it is fair to say that all of these works appear in their manuscripts in the company of works that are not of the same genre or by the same author—in other words, in volumes for which the term “miscellanies” is appropriate.² Even the most comprehensive artes never travel entirely alone. For instance, the longest of them, the Summa de arte praedicandi by Thomas of Chobham, from the 1220s, which occupies over three hundred pages in its modern edition, has been preserved together with other theological works;³ and the same is true of the equally comprehensive though shorter Ars componendi sermones by the English Benedictine monk Ranulph Higden, written probably between 1340 and 1350.⁴ This characteristic traveling in the company of other theological texts is even more pronounced in the case of the shorter complete artes. Their preservation will open a window on central questions discussed in this volume.

¹ Harry Caplan, Mediaeval "Artes Praedicandi": A Hand-List, Cornell Studies in Classical Philology 24 (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1934); Harry Caplan, Mediaeval "Artes Praedicandi": A Supplementary Hand-List, Cornell Studies in Classical Philology 25 (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1936). See also Marianne G. Briscoe, Artes Praedicandi / Barbara H. Jaye, Artes Orandi, Typologie des sources du moyen âge occidental, fasc. 61, A-VI.B.4 and A-VI.D.4* (Turnhout: Brepols, 1992); Siegfried Wenzel, “The Arts of Preaching,” in The Cambridge History of Literary Criticism II, The Middle Ages, ed. Alastair Minnis and Ian Johnson (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005), 84–96.

² Cf. Siegfried Wenzel, “Sermon Collections and Their Taxonomy,” in The Whole Book: Cultural Perspectives on the Medieval Miscellany, ed. Stephen G. Nichols and Siegfried Wenzel (Ann Arbor, MI: University of Michigan Press, 1996), 7–21.

³ Franco Morenzoni, ed., Thomas de Chobham, Summa de Arte Praedicandi, Corpus Christianorum Continuatio Mediaevalis 82 (Turnhout: Brepols, 1987), lxxv–lxxvii.

⁴ Margaret Jennings, ed., The Ars Componendi Sermones of Ranulph Higden O.S.B. (Leiden: Brill, 1991), xli–xlv.

but to avoid confusion I shall refer to it by its initium, Predicacio est.¹² Now, at the end of its sequel, that is, of Quamvis, there is still another ars praedicandi, which begins without title or rubric and turns out to be the Ars praedicandi by Jacobus de Fusignano, here preserved incomplete. Jacobus was a Dominican friar from the Roman province who died in 1333. His Libellus artis predicatorie is a much longer and elegant treatise of some 11,000 words, preserved in many manuscripts all over Europe. In the University College manuscript, then, our short treatise Quamvis appears sandwiched in between two other artes praedicandi that are significantly different.

The fourth manuscript, Cambridge University Library, Gg.6.20, holds even greater riches. It begins with the very long and well-known De modo componendi sermones by the English Dominican Thomas Waleys,¹³ written about 1340, and then adds three more shorter artes including an abbreviated version of Quamvis.¹⁴

But it is the fifth manuscript where things really become complicated. This is Cambridge, Corpus Christi College, 423. The volume is made up of at least three different booklets, of which only the second is of interest here.¹⁵ Its scribe begins with the opening sentences of Quamvis. When he reached the end of his initial announcement that he will treat three parts (thema, division, and development), he evidently felt that a definition of "sermon" was needed. So he turned away from Quamvis and went to a different treatise, one that begins with a definition of "sermon." This happened to be Predicacio est (see above), and he then copied not only its opening sentence but the entire treatise. After that, he returned to Quamvis where he had left off and now copied it to its normal end.

¹² Caplan, Mediaeval "Artes Praedicandi": A Hand-List, no. 121, and Caplan, Mediaeval "Artes Praedicandi": A Supplementary Hand-List, no. 121. Edited in Woodburn O. Ross, "A Brief Forma Praedicandi," Modern Philology 34 (1937): 337-44.

¹³ Caplan, Mediaeval "Artes Praedicandi": A Hand-List, 32. Edited in Théodore-Marie Charland, Artes praedicandi: Contribution à l'histoire de la rhétorique au moyen âge (Paris: J. Vrin, 1936), 328-403; translated by Dorothy E. Grosser, ed., "De modo componendi sermones," MA thesis, Cornell University, 1949.

¹⁴ They are: Circa autem artem faciendi sermonem sive collationem, fol. 101v-104v (Caplan, Mediaeval "Artes Praedicandi": A Supplementary Hand-List, no. 23a); an abbreviated version of Quamvis, fol. 104v-106v; and Geoffrey Schale, OSA, De modo sermocinandi, fol. 107r-111v. See Charland, Artes praedicandi, 37, 90, 97.

¹⁵ M. R. James, A Descriptive Catalogue of the Manuscripts in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, 2 vols. (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1912), vol. 2, 322-28.

When he had gotten so far, he continued to write down some more illustrative sermon material, part of which comes from another very popular work on preaching, the Ars concionandi that has been attributed to Bonaventure, though erroneously.¹⁶ Finally, in a new quire, the scribe (apparently the same) copied another treatise on sermon making, that by the Oxford master Simon Alcoc, written probably in the 1430s. Alcoc's work is what I have called a limited ars praedicandi, dealing only with ways to divide and expand the sermon thema, which Alcoc lists by such key words as Ad, quare, per, propter, and so on, which form the initium of his work.¹⁷ Each of these ways is briefly explained and then illustrated with one or more examples—features that obviously made Alcoc's treatise a very useful and practical instrument for preaching and guaranteed its popularity, as can be seen in the number of extant manuscripts and early printed books in which it has been preserved.

Thus, examining the manuscript environment of one particular treatise (Quamvis) has led at once to eight other works of the same genre. It would appear that for medieval scribes an ars praedicandi possessed a strong force to attract one or even more works of the same kind. This attraction—or, from the scribes' point of view, the urge to gather more than one ars praedicandi in one manuscript—was by no means limited to short treatises, such as Quamvis or Hic docet Augustinus or Vade in domum. It also affected longer arts of preaching. In one manuscript, for example, Quamvis, as we have seen, is accompanied by the fourteenth-century ars praedicandi of Thomas Waleys. The latter, well known to modern students from its edition by Charland, gives instruction on how to build a sermon and also discusses the office and quality of the preacher. It does so in a total of roughly 25,000 words, or 77 pages in Charland's edition.¹⁸ Incidentally, the edited text is only Part One—the complete work must have had two more parts in which Waleys gave sample sermons to illustrate his teaching.¹⁹ What has been preserved of Parts One and Two appears in one manuscript (Cambridge University Library Gg.6.20) together with Quamvis. Elsewhere it is, in a partial or ¹⁶ Caplan, Mediaeval "Artes Praedicandi": A Hand-List, no. 114. Bonaventura, Opera omnia, 9 vols. (Paris, 1864–1871), vol. 9, 8–21.

¹⁷ Caplan, Mediaeval "Artes Praedicandi": A Hand-List, no. 8; edited by Mary F. Boynton, "Simon Alcoc on Expanding the Sermon," Harvard Theological Review 34 (1941): 201–16.

¹⁸ Charland, Artes praedicandi, 327–403.

¹⁹ Charland, Artes praedicandi, 94–95.

abbreviated form, accompanied by the similarly comprehensive art of preaching by the English Benedictine monk Ranulph Higden,²⁰ or by shorter works, such as the artes praedicandi by Richard of Thetford (see below) or Simon Alcock.²¹

Such grouping affects not only artes composed in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries but can be equally found in works that originated earlier. A good case is the work of an Englishman who flourished around 1245, Richard of Thetford.²² His Ars dilatandi sermones, as the name already indicates, is not a complete but a limited art of preaching that deals only with the amplification or development of a sermon. For that, Thetford offers eight modes, which he analyzes, illustrates, and puts into logical relations with one other. Judging by the surviving manuscripts it must have been one of the most popular works on sermon making that were read and copied in the Middle Ages. For modern readers it has become familiar as Part Three of an ars praedicandi attributed to St. Bonaventure and printed as such in the late-nineteenth-century edition of Bonaventure's works, though Thetford's treatise evidently has nothing to do with the Franciscan theologian. In any case, the Ars dilatandi sermones appears in several manuscripts of the thirteenth century, and in one of them it is paired with what may be considered the earliest work on the art of preaching, the De arte praedicatoria by Alanus of Lille (died 1203).²³

If, therefore, many codices contain two or three or even more arts of preaching, usually copied by the same scribe, one may wonder whether these are attempts to create anthologies—deliberate endeavors to collect into one volume a number of works by the same author or works that belong to the same literary genre.²⁴ Such anthologizing clearly

²⁰ Ranulph Higden, Ars componendi sermones, Caplan, Mediaeval "Artes Praedicandi": A Supplementary Hand-List, no. 156; edited by Jennings, The Ars Componendi Sermones.

²¹ See above, n. 16.

²² Richard of Thetford (fl. c. 1245), Ars dilatandi sermones, Caplan, Mediaeval "Artes Praedicandi": A Supplementary Hand-List, no. 154. Edited in Bonaventura, Opera omnia, vol. 9, 16–21 (pars tertia); and by George J. Engelhardt, ed., "Richard of Thetford: A Treatise on the Eight Modes of Dilatation," Allegorica 3 (1978): 77–160 (with translation).

²³ Printed in PL 210, col. 111–98; translated by Gillian R. Evans, Alan of Lille, The Art of Preaching (Kalamazoo, MI: Cistercian Publications, 1981).

²⁴ Cf. Siegfried Wenzel, "Sermon Collections and Their Taxonomy," in The Whole Book, 19–20.

occurred in the textual history of the works of single authors (such as St. Jerome, or Robert Grosseteste, or Geoffrey Chaucer) and—more pertinently for our present concerns—of works belonging to the same genre, such as tracts on spiritual guidance. Can the same perhaps be claimed for artes praedicandi? One manuscript so far not mentioned that might qualify is codex Ottoboni 396 in the Vatican Library, a small fifteenth-century volume, which contains five artes praedicandi in sequence though written by different hands.²⁵ A similar case from England may be Oxford, Bodleian Library, Bodley 5, written about 1400, which contains two copies of Higden's art of preaching, plus Waleys's treatise (that is, Part One mentioned earlier), plus another short work on composing sermons.²⁶ Unfortunately, this manuscript lacks a number of quires, so that we do not know what else it might have contained originally.

However, I do not believe one can claim that scribes collected several artes praedicandi in order to produce a genre anthology. These works usually do not stand alone but are accompanied by different theological material. Even the just mentioned Ottoboni manuscript contains different matter before and after the five artes. Such other material would have been of use to preachers without exactly giving instruction on how to build a sermon. A fine example is provided by Oxford, Bodleian Library, Bodley 630. Here the short Predicacio est thematis assumpcio is followed by a concordance of the gospels, a list of the books of the Bible, and another list of liturgical lessons—all furnishing matter that preachers were advised to rely on in their sermon making. Another good example is Richard of Thetford's limited work on sermon amplification.²⁷ In many manuscripts it is accompanied by moral comments on biblical books (I, K, L), explanations of biblical names (B, F), collections of exempla (D, H), or bestiaries (D, K). Some of its manuscripts include collections of quotable authorities on theological and moral matters, such as the Scintillarium by Defensor of Ligugé (B), or medieval bestsellers of moral exhortation such as Innocent III's De contemptu mundi (E, H, K) or meditations attributed to St. Bernard and others (A). Nor are longer didactic works missing, such as the Elucidarium (D, G) or the handbook on pastoral matter by William of Wetheringsett (D) or the Templum Dei by Grosseteste (D). Still other works that accompany Thetford's Ars dilatandi sermones deal more exclusively with penance, whether in a short set of verses (Peniteas cito, in B, K), or expositions of the Ten Commandments (G), or the chief vices (A, D, G, H). Canonical matter is not lacking either (H, L). And of course entire sermons, individually or in sets, occur almost everywhere (B, C, F, I, K, L). All this goes to show that preaching arts were collected and written down together with other matter for eminently practical purposes, namely to instruct and help men who preached the word of God and also heard people's confessions and were often engaged in other pastoral work. In that respect these books might be called anthologies for preachers, in which artes praedicandi form a part.

²⁵ Caplan, Mediaeval "Artes Praedicandi": A Supplementary Hand-List, nos. 52, 84, 62, and 31. Between 84 and 62 occurs Raymund Lull's Ars abbreviata predicacionis.

²⁶ Circa scienciam compositionis sermonum, Caplan, Mediaeval "Artes Praedicandi": A Supplementary Hand-List, no. 24.

²⁷ The following information has been gleaned from catalogue descriptions of the following manuscripts: Cambridge, Corpus Christi College, 441 (A); Pembroke College, 275 (B); Lincoln, Cathedral Library, 59 (C); London, British Library, Harley 3244 (D); Royal 4.B.viii (E); Lambeth Palace Library, 477 (F); Oxford, Bodleian Library, Bodley 848 (G); Rawlinson C.317 (H); Magdalen College, 168 (I); Merton College, 249 (K); and Worcester, Cathedral Library, F. 84 (L).

But why were arts of preaching collected and copied in groups of two or three or even more? At least part of an answer may be found in the opening words of Quamvis: "Although in regard to sermon making a certain art cannot be handed on. . ." Certa ars, I suggest, here means "a fixed or uniform technique," a suggestion that gains strength from the expansion of this phrase in one manuscript to unica et certa ars.²⁸ Indeed, while artes praedicandi may agree in the basic structure of the scholastic sermon they teach, they differ in the details with which they treat individual aspects, in their emphases on one sermon part or another, and of course also in the illustrative examples they provide. Such differences often reflect different approaches to sermon making taken by actual preachers of the time. Robert Basevorn, for example, in his long work, discusses not only different styles of preaching used in the patristic age and the earlier Middle Ages but also structural differences cultivated by his contemporaries at Paris and at Oxford. And at one point he even declares that "there are almost as many different ways of preaching as there are able preachers," a statement echoed by his contemporary Thomas of Waleys: "One can hardly find two preachers composing their own sermons who in every respect agree in their sermon form."²⁹ It seems, then, that if you wanted to give helpful instruction on sermon making, copying out two different works was better than one, and three was even better.

²⁸ Cambridge, Corpus Christi College, 423.

The appearance of artes praedicandi in the manuscripts may also shed some light on the actual use of these works. Modern students of medieval preaching often display a certain diffidence with respect to this. They will allow that such works were produced in great numbers but then claim that it is "uncertain whether in themselves they exerted any great influence upon medieval preachers or the way they preached."³⁰ Now, it is certainly beyond question that these artes describe and analyze retrospectively what preachers were actually doing and had been doing in their sermons, for their authors themselves say so. Having acknowledged this much, one will notice that these artes again and again state principles and rules for the benefit of their readers, telling them in no uncertain terms to do this and not to do that, and constantly adding illustrations. Their overall mode of discourse is didactic and exhortative. They were ostensibly written for instruction, and the very form of their preservation suggests strongly that what they had to say and show was eagerly received and, as countless surviving sermons demonstrate, followed in practice.

²⁹ Charland, Artes praedicandi, 243 and 321.

³⁰ M. Michèle Mulchahey, "First the Bow is Bent in Study," Dominican Education Before 1350 (Toronto: Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, 1998), 473.

Medieval Manuscript Miscellanies:
Composition, Authorship, Use

MEDIUM AEVUM QUOTIDIANUM

SONDERBAND XXXI

Medieval Manuscript Miscellanies:
Composition, Authorship, Use

edited by
Lucie Doležalová and Kimberly Rivers

Krems 2013

Reviewed by Holly Johnson
and Farkas Gábor Kiss

Cover design by Petr Doležal with the use of MS St. Gallen, Stiftsbibliothek, 692
(photo Stiftsbibliothek St. Gallen)

GEDRUCKT MIT UNTERSTÜTZUNG

VON

CHARLES UNIVERSITY RESEARCH DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS
"UNIVERSITY CENTRE FOR THE STUDY OF ANCIENT AND MEDIEVAL INTELLECTUAL TRADITIONS"
AND
"PHENOMENOLOGY AND SEMIOTICS" (PRVOUK 18)
BOTH AT THE FACULTY OF HUMANITIES, CHARLES UNIVERSITY IN PRAGUE

UND DER

CZECH SCIENCE FOUNDATION
WITHIN THE RESEARCH PROJECT
"INTERPRETING AND APPROPRIATING OBSCURITY IN MEDIEVAL MANUSCRIPT CULTURE"
(GAČR P405/10/P112)

Alle Rechte vorbehalten
– ISBN 978-3-901094-33-~~A~~©

Herausgeber: Medium Aevum Quotidianum. Gesellschaft zur Erforschung der materiellen Kultur des Mittelalters, Körnermarkt 13, 3500 Krems, Österreich. Für den Inhalt verantwortlich zeichnen die Autoren, ohne deren ausdrückliche Zustimmung jeglicher Nachdruck, auch in Auszügen, nicht gestattet ist. Druck: KOPITU Ges. m. b. H., Wiedner Hauptstraße 8-10, 1050 Wien, Österreich.

Table of Contents

List of Figures
Acknowledgements
INTRODUCTION	1
Lucie Doležalová and Kimberly Rivers
I. TAXONOMY AND METHODOLOGY
Medieval Miscellanies and the Case of Manuscript British Library, Cotton Titus D.XX	14
Greti Dinkova-Bruun
The Art of Regensburg Miscellanies	34
Adam S. Cohen
Looking for the Purpose behind a Multitext Book: The Miscellany as a Personal "One-Volume Library"	70
Eva Nyström
II. AUTHORSHIP AND NON-AUTONOMY OF TEXTS
Non-autonomous Texts: On a Fifteenth-Century German "Gregorius" Manuscript (Constance, City Archive, Ms. A 1 1)	84
Diana Müller
The Appearance of "Artes praedicandi" in Medieval Manuscripts	102
Siegfried Wenzel
Creating the Memory of God in a Medieval Miscellany: Melk MS 1075, Jean de Hesdin (fl. 1350–1370), and Late Medieval Monastic Reform	112
Kimberly Rivers
Multiple Copying and the Interpretability of Codex Contents: "Memory Miscellanies" Compiled by Gallus Kemli (1417–1480/1) of St. Gall	139
Lucie Doležalová

III. USE

An Educational Miscellany in the Carolingian Age: Paris, BNF, lat. 528 Alessandro Zironi	168
The Constitution and Functions of Collections of Patristic Extracts: The Example of the Eucharistic Controversy (9th–11th centuries) Stéphane Gioanni	182
Theological Distinctions, Their Collections and Their Effects. The Example of In Abdiam and In Naum Csaba Németh	194
The Wiesbaden Miscellany. The Deliberate Construction of a Haphazard Collection Kees Schepers	218
An Interpretation of Brunetto Latini's Tresor in a Fifteenth-Century Miscellany Manuscriptuscripts Dario del Puppo	240
The Romances of British Library, Cotton Vitellius D.III Elizabeth Watkins	256
Contributors	270
Index librorum manuscriptorum	275
General Index	279
Colour Plates	285

Figures

- Figure 1: Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 14731, fol. 78r, Table of the Temple Showbread (Mensa propositionis). See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 2: Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 14731, fol. 80r, Noah's Ark. See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 3: Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 14731, fol. 82v-83r, Labyrinth / Jericho. See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 4: Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 14731, fol. 83v, World map. See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 5: Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 13002, fol. 7v, Microcosm. See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 6: Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 13105, fol. 83r, Initials from Honorius, Inevitabile. See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 7: Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 13074, fol. 81v-82r, Scenes from the Life of James the Less. See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 8: Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm. 14159, fol. 187v, Sons of Noah diagram. See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 9: An example of an easily recognizable break between codicological units, where the blank leaf at the end of the preceding unit was later used for personal annotations by an owner of the book (Cod. Ups. Gr. 8, fol. 87v- 88r).
- Figure 10: Compared to Figure 9, the break between the units is here less apparent, since the space left over at the end of the quire was in a second relay utilized by the scribe himself. The micro-texts added at the end of the unit link up with the preceding narrative and rhetorical texts, whereas the next unit, beginning on f. 104, is devoted to medical texts (Cod. Ups. Gr. 8, fol. 103v-104r).
- Figure 11: Drawing of a cherub. Vienna, Österreichische Nationalbibliothek, Codex Vindobonensis 12465, fol. 75v. By permission of the Österreichische Nationalbibliothek. See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 12: Drawing of a seraph. Vienna, Österreichische Nationalbibliothek, Codex Vindobonensis 12465, fol. 76v. By permission of the Österreichische Nationalbibliothek. See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 13: Conrad Celtis's mnemonic alphabet, Melk, Stiftsbibliothek, 1075, pp. 878-79. Image provided by the Hill Museum and Manuscript Library, Collegeville, MN.
- Figure 14: Alphabetic table to the Rule of St. Benedict: Signationes capitulorum Regulae S. Benedicti secundum alphabetum. Melk, Stiftsbibliothek, 1075, pp. 881-82. Image provided by the Hill Museum and Manuscript Library, Collegeville, MN.
- Figure 15: St. Gall, Stiftsbibliothek, 972b, p. 150, Cena nuptialis.
- Figure 16: St. Gall, Stiftsbibliothek, 293, p. 29, Cena nuptialis.

- Figure 17: St. Gall, Stiftsbibliothek, 692, p. 13, Cena nuptialis.
- Figure 18: St. Gall, Stiftsbibliothek, 692, cover.
- Figure 19: Paris, BNF, lat. 17371, fol. 153 (electronic elaboration).
- Figure 20: Paris, BNF, lat. 528, fol. 71v (electronic elaboration).
- Figure 21: Paris, BNF, lat. 5340, fol. 146v, 11th century.
- Figure 22: Wiesbaden, Hessisches Hauptstaatsarchiv, 3004 B 10, fol. 1v: Salvator Mundi (copyright Hessisches Hauptstaatsarchiv). See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 23: Wiesbaden, Hessisches Hauptstaatsarchiv, 3004 B 10, fol. 2v (copyright Hessisches Hauptstaatsarchiv). See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 24: Wiesbaden, Hessisches Hauptstaatsarchiv, 3004 B 10, fol. 3r (copyright Hessisches Hauptstaatsarchiv). See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 25: Wiesbaden, Hessisches Hauptstaatsarchiv, 3004 B 10, fol. 24v: The Adoration of the Magi (copyright Hessisches Hauptstaatsarchiv). See also the colour plate at the end of the volume.
- Figure 26: New Haven, CT, Beinecke Library, 1030, c. 52v.
- Figure 27: New Haven, CT, Beinecke Library, 1030, c. 53r.
- Figure 28: New Haven, CT, Beinecke Library, 1030, c. 2r.

Acknowledgements

This volume contains selected, peer-reviewed and revised contributions to an international conference Medieval Manuscript Miscellanies: Composition, Authorship, Use, which took place at the Charles University in Prague on August 24–26, 2009. The event and the publication of the book were supported by the Gerda Henkel Stiftung, a junior research grant to Lucie Doležalová from the Grant Agency of the Academy of Sciences of the Czech Republic, no. KJB801970701 (“Remembering One’s Bible: Reception of Summarium Biblie in 13th–15th c.”), by two Charles University Research Development Programs: “University Centre for the Study of Ancient and Medieval Intellectual Traditions” and “Phenomenology and Semiotics” (PRVOUK 18) both undertaken at the Faculty of Humanities, Charles University in Prague, and by a three-year post-doc grant to Lucie Doležalová from the Czech Science Foundation “Interpreting and Appropriating Obscurity in Medieval Manuscript Culture,” no. P405/10/P112, carried out at the Faculty of Arts, Charles University in Prague. It was possible to finish editing the book thanks to a Sciex-CRUS fellowship to Lucie Doležalová at the “Mittelateinisches Seminar” at the University of Zurich. We are also grateful to Petr Doležal who designed the book cover, as well as to Adéla Nováková who prepared the index.

Further gratitude goes to the Centre for Medieval Studies, part of the Philosophical Institute of the Academy of Sciences in Prague for providing the rooms for the conference. We are especially indebted to all the contributors for their kind patience during the editing process.